Completion of a Challenge and the Beginning of New Endeavors

Amie Louie and Aaron Pugliesi, Easy Milano founders

dear readers,

In 1999 my partner Aaron and I moved to Milan after spending several years in Paris. As an expat, I expected to find an English language publication to help me ease into life in Italy. Similarly my partner, returning to his hometown after close to a decade spent abroad, felt the need to stay connected to like-minded people with international experiences. What we discovered was surprising--there was no such publication. There were thousands of expats living in Milan, but there was no Community. English speakers would congregate at work related groups, revolve around the occasional Consulate event or meet to share and swap books in English. There were a multitude of micro-communities comprising of a few dozen clubs and a cluster of small groups, all essentially disconnected from one another. We were in our twenties and had the audacity to think we could make a difference. Our goal was to bridge the gap and bring the community together, a single community--vast and diverse, made up of tens of thousands of international individuals that would infiltrate Milan and bring new impulse to it. Soon, expats were not to feel alone anymore in this alluring yet foreign country; or even worst, have to wait for visitors from abroad to bring them a can of Libby's or a jar of Marmite.

How were we going to do this? Weeks followed and Easy Milano was born, a FREE magazine distributed in key places around the entire city and composed only of classifieds and display ads. "That's crazy," people would tell us, "a free magazine without articles would never work. Who would take you seriously without a cover price and who would want to read advertisements?" Months later, Italy caught on and we found comfort in other crazy free press pioneers--Metro and shortly after in 2001 City and Leggo came on the scene. We felt reassured. We had already started getting support from the many associations that understood the value of cross communication with other groups. Consulates were freeing themselves of hundreds of requests from foreign residents by diverting them towards Easy Milano. English-speaking doctors and professionals were getting visibility at a fraction of the cost. International schools were gaining greater interest, Chambers of Commerce were attracting managers to their events; and even the City of Milan was pleasantly surprised to discover that Milan had so much to offer to international residents.

Back then business was done the old fashion way, in person or on the phone. We had multiple rolodexes sitting on our desks. Proposals with lira and euro amounts were sent out via fax, one page at a time. Over time the Easy Milano brand grew and eventually became a household name for English speaking foreigners living in Milan. In 2008, we were called by the U.S. Consulate General in Milan to co-brand the largest and most memorable Election Night event ever made. Easy Milano not only published thousands of classified ads, year after year, we supported the communication efforts of hundreds of growing businesses. It had now become a catalyst for events that would physically bring together thousands of people to experience authentic Anglo-American traditions and values. The U.S. Presidential Election Nights, 4th of July Celebrations, Queen's Birthday Party, Thanksgiving Dinners and countless other events... all became opportunities to connect, exchange and share. This went on for years--nearly 18 years and 375 issues now!

The city we live in today has increasingly become more international and multicultural than it was when our mission began. Of course, we were not the only ones promoting internationalization and intercultural integration, but we were proud to do our part and be the vehicle for your ideas and your requests. Today expats can buy international food at the local supermarket, find English-speaking doctors on Google and can join expat groups on Facebook. Even the local government has English speaking services now. The natural evolution for a publication like Easy Milano would be to go completely digital, but we decided not to take that route. We feel we did what was needed and served the international community when it needed it the most.

Aaron and I decided instead to follow new career paths; abandon the comfort of our tepid groove and seek new enriching experiences, dare to take on new ambitious challenges and hopefully make a difference for others and for ourselves. As some of you may know, Aaron was appointed Secretary General and CEO of The British Chamber of Commerce for Italy this past February. And in January 2018, I will be taking on the full time role as Development Director at the British School of Milan. We do not see this as the end of a journey, but rather the completion of a challenge and the beginning of new endeavors. You may not realize it yet, but once again, we will rely on your enthusiasm and encouragement to achieve our goals. We will be engaged in promoting international culture, international business and intercultural relations. We will be calling upon you for new collaborations and advice. We will need your support along the way, so even if at the end of this year we will stop publishing Easy Milano, we are not going away. We are just moving on to do something different, something new and hopefully something even better.

Last but not least, we are currently engaged in a conversation with Where Milan, a wonderful local English publication managed by a crazy visionary named Andrea Jarach, that will likely be taking on the role, along side EasyCircle.it, of providing the local international community with useful information, event listings and news.

If Easy Milano has played a role in your life, or if you would like to drop us a line, we would love to hear from you. info@easymilano.it.

Warm regards,

Amie

Thanksgiving Message from Consul General Elizabeth Lee Martinez

I am grateful for the opportunity to write this year's Thanksgiving message to Easy Milano readers. As a recent arrival to Milan, this is a wonderful way for me to be able to reach out to new people, particularly around the holidays. We are looking forward to our first Italian Thanksgiving. I know from my years in the Foreign Service that although Thanksgiving is the most quintessential of American holidays one does not need to be in America to celebrate.

This year, I am happy to be spending the Thanksgiving holidays in beautiful Milan. Many Americans have chosen to make Italy home: 35,000 U.S. citizens reside in Northern Italy alone! A fact that, I believe, can be largely attributed to the long friendship between the US and Italy. In Milan's consular district, more than 60 educational exchange programs exist between American and Italian universities, promoting the flow of students, researchers, and educators from both countries.

“ Thanksgiving is a time for welcoming new people into our lives. It's not about the turkey, or the stuffing – it's about coming together. ”

Thanksgiving is a time for welcoming new people into our lives. The pilgrims could not have survived their first winter at Plymouth Rock had it not been for the Native Americans who gave them food and shelter and taught them how to work the land. This message of welcome is one that I have been reminded of time and again these past few weeks. I want to take this opportunity to say thank you – thank you for welcoming us and sharing your time and energy and enthusiasm about Italy with me and my husband Don. We look forward to many more wonderful interactions over the next three years.

The first Thanksgiving among the pilgrims and the Wampanoag people was about food, but more than food it was about graciousness and generosity, about one group of people seeing another in need and saying “we have more than enough.” That's how Thanksgiving started and that's how we hope it will always continue, with people turning to their neighbor, their partner, their friend and saying “well I guess we could share...” This Thanksgiving, I challenge you to keep the spirit of Thanksgiving alive; to be the ones that share.

Something that I've learned from my time in the Foreign Service – and many Thanksgivings spent abroad – is that Thanksgiving can happen anywhere. Whether in Kingston, Jamaica, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, or Casablanca, Morocco, it's not about the turkey, or the stuffing, or the mashed potatoes, or the pumpkin pie – it's about coming together.

From everyone at the US Consulate General in Milan - Happy Thanksgiving, wherever you may celebrate it.

Emotional Hurdles of Studying Abroad

For many university students, a highlight of the college years is the chance to live abroad for a semester – or even a year – and experience life and school in a completely new culture, and often, a new language. Some students carefully plan their studies around being able to manage a semester abroad, knowing that it's something they've always wanted to do. Others may have less conviction, but they decide it's an adventure and risk worth taking. Regardless of how they made the decision, once students show up in their host country, they're all in the same boat. But, how those students will fare in the months ahead of them can depend in large part on how prepared they were for their experience, many aspects of which can come as a shock.

In my practice I see a wide range of university students, some who are studying in Milan for full degrees and others who are in Milan only for a semester exchange from their "home" university. In many ways, their presenting issues only confirm what seems to be an international reality in the world of mental health: that more people than ever – especially teen-agers and young adults – are suffering from mild to severe anxiety. Even students without pre-existing conditions – including those with experience in international moves with their families – are prone to experience unusually high levels of stress and anxiety when finding themselves thousands of miles from home, going it alone in foreign territory for the first time.

While students expect excitement, adventure and newness when going abroad, what is often overlooked is just how hard it can be to fill the time. Most study abroad programs factor in a lot of down time for culture, travel and experiences outside of classroom and study time. And most students arrive in their host country not knowing anyone else in their program. Unlike at their home universities, the pool from which to make friends is extremely small. For some, friendships are made easily, quickly eliminating the issue of, "Who will I eat meals with? Who will I explore with? Who will I take all my great trips with?" For others, friendships within the small program group can be harder to forge. This often creates anxiety about the possibility of too much time alone in a new country. And although many students would be eager to meet students outside their program, communicating in a foreign language they barely speak means the possibility of friendships with locals becomes even more of a challenge.

Returning to the great expectations students have before going abroad, I often hear how much pressure students put on themselves to not only maximize, but to love, every moment of the experience. This is especially true for students who have worked and planned for a long time to make it happen.

FRAMED

Get results! Adding a frame around your ad really makes it stand out! Whether you are an individual or business, framed ads guarantee more visibility and are well worth the €12. www.easymilano.it
